

Eberhard Arnold

In 1920, leaving a promising career as a writer and the privileges of upper-middle-class life in Berlin, Arnold moved with his wife and children to Sannerz, a small village in central Germany, where they founded a community on the basis of Jesus' Sermon on the Mount. Later named the Bruderhof, this settlement grew into an international Christian community movement that is still growing and evolving today.

● The Early Christians

The Early Christians in their own words. Selected and edited by Eberhard Arnold. What did Christianity look like before it became an institution? Find out for yourself with this collection of firsthand accounts of the early church. Includes excerpts from Origen, Tertullian, Polycarp, Clement of Alexandria, Justin, Irenaeus, and others—and equally revealing material from their critics, detractors and persecutors.

● Why we live in Community

In this time-honored manifesto, Arnold adds his voice to the vital discussion of what real intentional community is all about: love, joy, unity, and the great "adventure of faith" shared with others along the way. He does not describe (or prescribe) community here, but provides a vision to guide our search.
